- A special effort is being made to revive educational activities in Thuringia. A general raise in teachers' salaries was ordered. A delegation of 90 teachers attended the teacher's convention in Berlin, lasting about 14 days.
- 2. Fourteen teachers were especially cited at the Weimar-Halle Teacher's Congress for having worked toward a democratic educational system.
- 3. By 1 June 1945, 6059 Thuringian teachers, former party members, or 90 percent of all the Thuringian teachers, had been dismissed since February 1945. Also 3541 teachers, or 45 percent of the present number of teachers employed, have joined one of the three democratic parties. Almost 100 percent have joined a union. By 1 September 1946 there should be 12,000 teachers available.
- There are 2150 elementary schools in Thuringia, and about 100 professional and trade schools with about 450 teachers. An additional 100 trade and professional schools are to be started after 1 September 1946. 229 teachers were trained for professional schools, namely for engineering, clothing, food, metallurgy, mining, handicraft and girls' vocational training schools.
- The school of architecture at Weimar is to be reopened around 1 September 1946. A school of music in Weimar has been opened since May 1946.
